

Christmas Thoughts 1993

by Carl Jones

Welcome to my Christmas thoughts
each year they seem to surface.
To remind my friends and co-workers,
I write this for a purpose.

This year my thoughts were mainly of the troubles of our nation.
Which really seem quite magnified
when looking from this station.

We are quite aware of famine,
and the hunger all around.
There is very little we can do
to bring this problem down.

There are a few things we can do
to help our fellow man.
These things should be attempted whenever, wherever we can.

For the most part we are kindly folk,
to this side I appeal.
Do what you can to help those who,
must beg to get a meal.

Coats and blankets, gloves and hats,
things you no longer wear.
Can help a person down on their luck,
who must live life in despair.

These things I ask of you are small,
but should not be rejected.
For those who benefit from your love,
will seldom feel dejected.

My friends, I'm proud to call you so,
and hope your hearts unfurl.
Let's help those we now find in need,
both here and around the world.
